Safeguarding Audit May 2018

We were recently audited for our safeguarding standards by an independent assessor. Our assessor was impressed with not only our procedures but also the knowledge the children had about how to keep themselves safe outside of school and online. She did however comment on the number of children waiting outside of school unsupervised for breakfast club, choir etc. Please remain with your children until you can hand them over to a member of staff. We have altered breakfast club starting on a trial basis to 7:45 to help with this.

Are you 'sharenting' too much?

"Sharenting" - where parents share personal information about their children on social media - is the "weakest link" in risking online fraud and identity theft, warns Barclays.

The bank says parents are compromising their children's future financial security with so much online sharing.

The bank's security specialists say social media means identity fraud has "never been easier".

Barclays is warning that parents might be "lulled into a false sense of security" and fail to realise they are making their children "fraud targets" in the future, by publishing so much personal information which will remain online.

Identity fraud

Parents are being told that information on social media is vulnerable to being misused to hack passwords or for identity fraud scams.

The bank says parents can reveal names, ages and dates of births from birthday messages, home addresses, place of birth, mother's maiden name, schools, the names of pets, sports teams they support and photographs.

Barclays warns that such details, which will still be available when young people are adults, could be used for fraudulent loans or credit card transactions or online shopping scams.

The bank is urging parents to check their online privacy settings and to make sure that they know what information is being made available about their children.

"Through social media, it has never been easier for fraudsters to gather the key pieces of information required to steal someone's identity," said Jodie Gilbert, head of digital safety for Barclays.
